Part I (35 points)

A. Part 1 – A Summer's Reading

1. (ii) – Dream of a better life.
2. (iii) Tries to encourage George.
3. Mr. Cattanzara is described as a hard-working person who lives, like George, in a poor neighborhood. However, we can infer that Mr. Cattanzara is an intelligent person because he reads The New-York Times every night from cover to cover. Furthermore, as opposed to other people in the neighborhood, Mr. Cattanzara shows true interest in George even when George himself doesn't. For that reason, Mr. Cattanzara is well placed to make a difference in George's life.

4. Thinking skill I chose: inferring

We can infer that George felt that way because of his mixed emotions. On one hand, George dreams of a better life for himself, but his self-doubt, low ego and low self-esteem stop him from achieving his dream. On the other hand, by going to the library, George takes his life into his own hands, and is therefore, filled with excitement due to the fact that he finally decided to fulfill his goal and keep his word to Mr. Cattanzara.

Part II (45 points)

C. THE WAVE

10. Ben decides to do The Wave experiment because he could not answer his pupils' questions about the behavior of many Germans under the Nazi regime and why the Germans who weren't part of the Nazi movement behaved the way they did.

11. (a). They were more serious about their school work
12. The Wave became a monster because its members gave up their individuality and followed Ben blindly without thinking for themselves. Several times Ben even heard them discussing "orders" he had given, but in fact those were orders he never gave. Moreover, The Wave became a violent movement, since its members threatened students who didn't join The Wave.
13. The Wave had positive and negative effects. One of the positive sides of The Wave was that it gave a sense of belonging. Everyone was equal and there was no competition. Moreover, students became disciplined and organized. However, The Wave had also negative effects. For example, students followed Ben's rules blindly without thinking for themselves. They also gave up their individuality, and were violent toward other students who refused to join The Wave.
14. Thinking Skill I chose: Inferring.

I infer that The Wave affects Robert and Laurie differently because of their different personalities. Laurie is a popular and successful girl, unlike Robert who is the class loser. Laurie was taught to be an individual and be a critical thinker. Her self-confidence allows her to resist The Wave and understand how bad it is. Robert, on the other hand, is not self- confident without The Wave. For this reason, The Wave is crucial for him. It is his only chance to fit in. The Wave gives him a sense of purpose and sense of belonging.

PART III

17. As I Grew Older.

Hughes states that we can achieve whatever we want in life- if we are truly dedicated to achieving it. This helps us understand the message of his poem in which the speaker, as he grows older, faces many obstacles that prevent him from achieving his dreams. However, in the last part of the poem, we can see how the speaker does not let these obstacles define his life. Thus, because of his strong belief in himself and abilities, he "breaks the wall" and overcomes the limitations. As a result, he is capable of making his dreams come true.

15. Mr. Know-All

The connection between the above quote and the story is that they both discuss people's complexity. In the story the main characters have many sides. For example, Mr. Kelada seems to be a pushy person that thinks he is always right. He also behaves differently from other people on the ship. This makes the passengers judge Mr. Kelada. However, at the end of the story Mr. Kelada is revealed as a true gentleman when he chooses to lose the bet and his reputation in order to save Mrs. Ramsay's marriage. This shows that people have many sides and that we should not judge people before we know them. We can see this too in Mrs. Ramsay, who is depicted as a delicate, sweet and gentle woman, however, in the end we find out her true colors.
